Just Jazz

July 2013

Hi Friends —

Normally in this space I throw my fastball (jazz) or my curveball (politics). But this month I'm tossing my changeup and talkin' baseball, specifically, the "designated hitter rule." I come neither to bury nor to praise the DH, but to answer the so-called purists who for four decades have been railing against it. Oh, they've been singing the same kind of tune for years and years, defending their pet version of the National Pastime from desecration by the lively ball, night games, domed stadiums — they were right about the last one.

Hey, I'm a lifelong baseball fan — a DH-less National League fan — and I can see no evidence of how the DH has ruined the game. Changed it, yes, but hardly ruined it. Was it wrong to extend the careers of veterans like Orlando Cepeda, Rico Carty, Tony Oliva, Willie Horton, Harold Baines, or save the careers of young stars like Hal McRae — productive players and fan favorites — whose ability to run around in the field had been eroded by age and/or injury?

Purists argue that the DH robs the game of "strategy." But what they call "strategy" I call "knee-jerk moves" that rob the game of fun and excitement. National League fans, how many times have you had to endure an automatic sacrifice bunt by your pitcher? Even if it succeeds this so-called strategy spends one of your team's most precious assets, an out. (You get only twenty-seven per game.) Or maybe the manager decides to pinch hit for the pitcher. National League fans, how many times have you been exasperated to see your starter, pitching well in a tight game, taken out in a vain attempt to "manufacture" a run and replaced by an inept reliever who then flushes the game down the toilet? The DH keeps strong pitchers in the game and weak ones in the bullpen — or in the minors.

But DH's are "one-dimensional players." Yes, and most pitchers also are "one-dimensional players": all pitch, no hit. Oh, I know all about the Bob Gibsons and the Don Drysdales who "hit well for pitchers" — faint praise that. But if they were that all gifted with the bat sooner or later they'd have been make into outfielders. That did happen — just once — to a brilliant young big league pitcher who hit well, and not just "for a pitcher." I guess you've heard of Babe Ruth.

Look, the DH is here to stay. You don't have to love it, but at least understand that since its adoption forty years ago it has brought some new and interesting and even useful elements into the game. And if you can't do that, just take two and hit to left.

Stay cool and keep your eye on the ball,
Bob

QUOTES OF THE MONTH

Little of beauty has America given the world And so by fateful chance the Negro folksong ... stands to-day not simply as the sole American music, but as the most beautiful expression of human experience born this side of the seas.

— W.E.B. DuBois
The Souls of Black Folk (1903)

The bottom line of any country is, what did we contribute to the world? We contributed Louis Armstrong.

— Tony Bennett

NEW & RECOMMENDED CDS

Josh Brown: Songbook Trio (Gut String): Minimal, sensitive guitar and bass accompaniment — by Randy Napoleon and Neil Miner, respectively — supports the trombone of Josh Brown, breezing through this tastefully swinging set of eight standards and two originals. Brown never forces the issue, never overplays or overpowers, remaining always in full command of his instrument, and his well chosen material.

Paul Carlon: La Rumba Is a Lovesome Thing (Zoho): With cleverness and creativity saxophonist-arranger Paul Carlon has crafted an imaginative Latin-tinged homage to master composer Billy Strayhorn. Carlon and an excellent Latin jazz ensemble carry ten classic tunes to a land of new ideas and sounds, offering a fresh perspective on Strayhorn's immortal work.

Duduka Da Fonseca: New Samba Jazz Directions (Zoho): Following its brilliant 2011 presentation of the music of Toninho Horta, drummer Duduka Da Fonseca's Rio-based trio (David Feldman, piano; Guto Wirtti, drums) now offers a lively program filled largely with their own originals. There is nothing more delightful than the fusion of American jazz and Brazilian samba, and no one achieves this samba-jazz fusion more effectively than Duduka Da Fonseca.

Wayne Wallace: Latin Jazz-Jazz Latin (Patois): Trombonist Wayne Wallace and his Latin Jazz Quintet, plus an array of special guests, straddle — no, erase — the line between jazz and Latin musics. Wallace's own compositions stand tall alongside his inventive recastings of such jazz classics as Coltrane's "Giant Steps" (performed as a merengue), Monk's "I Mean You" (as a bomba), and Ellington's "Prelude to a Kiss" (as a danzón/bolero).
