September 2014

Hi Friends —

Last month the incidents in Ferguson, Missouri, managed to occupy the so-called “24-hour news cycle” for several weeks. While tensions there seem — yes, only seem — to have abated, it’s only a matter of time before the next Ferguson. So for when — not “if,” but “when” — if happens here’s a brief glossary of terms that may help clarify both the events and the mainstream media’s coverage of them.

senseless violence: seemingly sudden reactions of oppressed and brutalized people to decades of oppression and brutality (see: riot) outside influences: protesters from outside the event’s immediate area, who understand that local events have national implications (see: outside agitators; anarchists) tear gas: a weapon which, according to the Geneva Convention, nations may not use in war, but law enforcement agencies may use for domestic “riot control” rubber bullets: “non-lethal” projectiles used in “riot control” that have caused bone fractures, injuries to internal organs, permanent disabilities, and death

grand jury: a closed, secret, and tightly controlled process used by prosecutors to avoid making contentious decisions in public news media: at its best, a group of dedicated professionals who expose and publicize previously unseen and unknown outrages, and, by its presence, may prevent a bad situation from getting worse

the First Amendment: the part of the US Constitution that prohibits governments at all levels from abridging “the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.” It does not specify when (e.g., daylight hours) nor how (e.g., “keep moving”) the people may exercise those rights.

apartheid: a system of social and political segregation in which a large number of people belonging to one racial or ethnic group is governed by a small number of people belonging to a different racial or ethnic group; e.g.,: South Africa, 1948-94; Ferguson, MO, 2014

QUOTES OF THE MONTH

My first question to anyone who’s on television saying “We have to get tough, we have to put boots on the ground, we have to go to war in one of these places” is: I will hear you out if you tell me you are prepared to send your son, your daughter, your grandson, your granddaughter to that war for which you are beating the drums. If you aren’t I have no patience with you, and don’t even talk to me.

– Dan Rather

DON’T MISS WNTI’S GREAT SUNDAY LINE-UP

NEW & RECOMMENDED CDS

Sharel Cassity: Manhattan Romance \(Venus\): Alto and soprano saxophonist Sharel Cassity’s latest release is a rich program of North American and Latin American standards. She renders them all with joy and passion, backed by as impeccable a rhythm section as can be assembled today: Cyrus Chestnut on piano, Rufus Reid on bass, Lewis Nash on drums.

Diva: A Swingin’ Life \(MCG Jazz\): The power and glory of the big band known as Diva — “sixteen women swingin’” — are captured in a pair of live sessions from 2001 and 2012. They are joined on three tracks by the soulful voice of Marlena Shaw and on two more by the timeless voice of Nancy Wilson, including a Grammy-worthy treatment of Van Heusen and Cahn’s “All My Tomorrows.”

Ed Partyka Jazz Orchestra: Hits! \(Vol. 1\): \(Mons\): A prolific and imaginative arranger, Ed Partyka’s work generally tends toward dark, somber, atmospheric moods. So this new CD by his superb Austria-based big band, filled largely with standards and originals set in a somewhat brighter hue, is a real change of pace. But while the mood may be “lighter,” there is nothing “lightweight” about Partyka’s writing, which, as ever, exhibits substance and depth.

Steve Wilson & Lewis Nash: Duologue \(MCG Jazz\): Alto saxophonist Steve Wilson and drummer Lewis Nash have performed together on countless gigs and innumerable CDs, so it was only natural that they collaborate on a striking duo recording. Their interplay is truly intuitive and their thoughtful use of space — both creating it and filling it — sets a standard for duo improvisation.
